I would be less than honest to pose as an authority on educational matter. However, as a person who gains his livelihood from the real estate and development business, I do have two very solid opinions. First, to be able to tell a prospective home buyer that we have both a academic and technical high

Lakewood leash law lax?

To the Editor:

Lakewood may be getting lax in its enforcement of the city's leash law.

A 3-year-old girl in our neighborhood was badly bitten this week by a dog that "got loose" (the standard excuse).

There are quite a few such dogs which "get loose" and regularly roam the block where they live. The accepted "good neighbor policy" is not to report these dogs, for their owners may be people we socialize with.

The real "good neighbor" would do something about it and perhaps save somebody from getting bitten.

Most of these unleashed dogs, of course, "love children and wouldn't hurt anybody." This is probably true but if these dogs are allowed to run, the owner of a dog that might bite must be granted the same privilege with his dog.

There is a young man on Edgewater Drive who lets his German shepherd dog run free while the youth walks nearby, carrying the leash in his hand.

I saw this dog frighten a child on a bicycle. The youth called out, "He won't hurt you." Maybe not but the dog shouldn't be allowed to frighten people either. Our law is that you keep your dog on a a leash. Do the police keep a sharp eye out for this sort of thing?

We must also start fining people who stop to let their dogs go on other people's lawns or shrubbery unless they are willing to pick up after their dogs.

A lot in common

To the Editor:

Jack Clowser and George M McGovern have quite a lot in common. Someone should buy them both a crying towel.

I wonder what the U.S.A. did to him, he's had a good job all of his life. He said he was too old for World War II, although I knew people older than him who joined the paratroopers. But he was lucky, he stayed home....

So he lives in a nice home in Rocky River. He has plenty to eat and to wear. Yet, he's been waving a red flag and abusing the U.S.A. the last few years. We may and do have lots of faults in the United States but I like it here. If I didn't I'd get out and go elsewhere.
